I wish they would just spend the money and get me a "normal" kennel!

When your bulldog is too tired to hold a proper posture, use the new "posture improver" designed especially for bulldogs and their special needs.

Oh, sure, go get the camera instead of helping me!

But the Halloween costume contest isn't for another 8 months.

I can see the toy but I just can't reach it.

Are you SURE this is a backpack?

The cat told me it was a jacket.

I know I got myself in here, but I can't remember how to get out.

Oh', Oh', another time out!!

I was an apprentice under Houdini and for my final trick...I will escape from the rungs of this chair.

Now how did I get myself into this predicament?!

They put me in jail!!

Help I am trapped and I can't get out!

Time outs stink!

pet perspective

Andy's Little Wind-Up Toy comes for a visit:

I've had Bulldogs for decades and I was reminded this weekend of how I used to feel that taking a Bulldog out of a Bulldog-only household into the world with other breeds of dogs helped emphasize the uniqueness of the Bulldog body structure.

During the time I had my first Bulldog, I had a friend who raised Afghans. Comparing Casey with one of the Afghans was my first "dog diversity" experience. Then we started obedience classes which were taught by German Shepherd breeders, and most of the students were German Shepherds.

Later, when my Jake was a puppy, I had friends who had a Lhasa Apso and a Bichon and the hair coat contrast was a hoot.

(My other Bulldog Sadie was just in love with the horse next door, which was a contrast of size, and was at times frustrating, because I couldn't find her, until I trained myself to just look across the field to the neighbor's fence before I started panicking. The horse would actually lean way down over the fence to nuzzle Sadie's muzzle.)

Then along came Andy, whose greatest joy is leaving home to find people and animals to pet him and to play with. His classes have been filled with contrasting dog types. One of his best buddies was Mike, the white Schnauzer.

A trip to the Dog Park can also yield some contrasting dog body types, as can a trip to a friend's home for animals not available in your house. ----->

This weekend, Andy's little wind-up toy came to visit for a few days. Her name is Bella. She's a Yorkie -- all 4 lbs of her. She's very quick, and Andy runs after her all over the house and fenced-in yard. Her visits also keep him busy sniffing for her pee areas in the back yard, and marking his own scent on top of each of hers. She's quite the entertainment for Andy, but she pipes up and let's Andy know when she's had enough of his nuzzling her. Andy and Bella trotted off side by side on our frigid walk, sharing a sniff session on a neighborhood "pee post". It must have been a strange site, because cars seemed to be slowing and pointing and gawking more than usual.

From their mooshy chops, cute rose ears, and stops just begging for a finger rub, to their deep chests, cute butts and screw tails, to their Happy Dances and rolling gait, there's nothing quite like a Bulldog!

So, what have you compared your Bulldog to lately?

Rescue Update

Rosie's new owner's report that Rosie is doing great and settling in well with her new "sisters", Betsy and Dorothy. They say that Rosie loves to play with stuffed toys and chase tennis balls. Rosie's new friend, Betsy has even taught Rosie a new skill. Rosie's new owner Joe said, "If there is a 3 am backyard run, Betsy nudges Rosie to come with her, and they quietly wake up one of us. (Dorothy sleeps thru the night)." I wonder if that is a skill her new owners appreciate. But Betsy must like not having to venture out into the dark alone. Pretty smart dog, that Betsy.

Miss Rosetta has a new 'trick' After we've all gone to bed... she gets up and finds a couch or chair to curl up on. But first she'll fluff a throw pillow or afghan under herself. We actually only 'caught' her twice... but there's been lots of nights of evidence with rearranged pillows. One of these days I'll have the camera ready. Can't get too upset 'cause she's so cute.
